From The Utica Herald.

"Mr. Bisnell's volume has no crudeness—no blind reaching after the unintelligible. The Pance is a ringing satire on the monetary revulsion of 1857; the narrative is well told, the verse is in pure and musculine English, and the poem as a whole remitted one in the posits of the verse and the vertical militards of the ideas of the poems of Coldanith. The melodious blank verse of Cyrilla contains frequent happy, unambitious lines that ring in the ear and heart like remembered mostic... These extracts" (referring to a column of quotations) "are like a few drops of wine carclessly spilled, and can hardly convey the zest and the flavor which the grape-juice gives from the goldet. Rips scholarship, a genial collure, the ear of the artist, and many of the graces of inney belong to the author."

"These Peems abound with beautiful imagery, and are characterized by the little vein of poetry and much depth of thought. In our opinion the author has fully established his clein to decided poetic shility, and the fact that has, of a verity, slept upon Farnastus."
